country professing to buy horses.

For Welshmen to learn to express their thoughts in English is now so universal throughout the Principality as to be taken as a matter of course, but the converse is just as rare. Last week, however, Captain J. Roberts, of the Symdde Dylluan Mine, delivered a lecture in the Congregational Chapel, Drws-y-coed, on "Gas," in Welsh, though an Englishman. As nothing is so entertaining to a Cymro as to hear an Englishman speak Welsh, there was a full house.
